From Gain of Function to Gain of Wisdom

BY DAVID LORIMER

A number of years ago, our President Bernard Carr organised a meeting in Cambridge on the multiverse, where Prof Keith Ward from Oxford was commenting on Richard Dawkins's assertion that religions are dangerous. No, he said, it's human beings who are dangerous.

There has been much debate about the origins of Covid-19 and many competing narratives around the inherent uncertainties. The overall context, however, is clear: it is the so-called gain of function (GOF) research where the object is to enhance the deadliness and transmissibility of a virus. The Wuhan Laboratory is one of the leading facilities in this respect, and has received research grants from the US National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). The Obama administration suspended this research for safety reasons in 2014, but it was reinstated with new guidelines in 2017.

The research rationale is preventative and defensive: the need to know how to prevent pandemics and defend yourself against enemy intent. However, for the putative enemy, your biosecurity is potentially a cover for the development of offensive bioweapons. Kenneth Bernard, a biodefence expert, puts it like this: 'Defending against biothreats by developing countermeasures looks a lot like an offensive bioweapons programme' to some countries.

The result is that each country projects their own fear and shadow on the other. As with nuclear deterrence, the logic is one of mutually assured destruction (MAD). However, genuine security can only arise from the building of trust, which includes trust by the people in the integrity of their

The Modern Platonist

This anonymous blog (part of the 'Interfaith Now' community on Medium) features topics that fall within the category of Platonic philosophy, including articles about Epicurus, Nietzsche's Superman, syncretism, monotheism and much more. Below is an excerpt taken from Jesus According to the Gospel of Thomas.

'The Gospel of Thomas is a collection of 114 sayings of Jesus. In these sayings, there is no mention of the miracles, the crucifixion, the resurrection, and the ascension of Jesus — and naturally the dogma of the Trinity is absent. The Gospel of Thomas presents the Jesus of Wisdom, not the Jesus of Faith. Thus, Jesus becomes the enlightened teacher who imparts wisdom. These sayings are elaborated according to the Greek tradition but also the Jewish tradition of the logoi sophon – the 'sayings of the sages.' Read the article here.

governments. This is where a culture of secrecy comes in. Intelligence services around the world pursue covert operations on behalf of their governments on the basis of 'plausible deniability'. If people actually knew everything that is going on behind the scenes, they would undoubtedly protest and governments could not continue this kind of activity that they regard essential to their national interests.

The same secrecy/transparency dilemma applies to gain of function research. There is a worldwide community of virologists whose livelihoods depend on its continuation and who naturally do not want to see the applecart upended. These same people sit on government advisory panels like the US National Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity (NSABB). They fear that if the review process is opened up to the scrutiny of ethicists, scientists and the general public, then the whole project will grind to a halt and all the high security BSL labs will be closed down. Hence, the incentive to keep things confidential on a need-to-know basis.

"It's time for us as a species to address our collective shadows, fears and mistrust."

Such closure would be amply justified simply on the basis of the precautionary principle, which we use in defence but not yet for environmental security, despite many years of advocacy. On ethical grounds, this is surely a collective imperative, as advocated by Francis Boyle, a lawyer involved in drafting bioweapons legislation. He is adamant that all BSL3 and BSL4 laboratories must be closed down and all biowarfare work with lethal pathogens ceased. 'They are all existentially dangerous,' he says. 'This is a catastrophe waiting to happen. And it is now happened.'

It's time for us as a species to address our collective shadows, fears and mistrust. As Dr Andrew Powell remarks: 'Covid-19 may be the bullet but, of course, we, the human species, created the gun.' Let's reframe the terms of the discussion beyond gain of function and start addressing gain of wisdom instead. To quote Deuteronomy: 'I have set before you life and death, blessings and curses. Now choose life, so that you and your children may live.'

► VIDEOS OF NOTE

Max Velmans: Is this Universe Conscious?

This talk by Prof Max Velmans, given at a seminar on 7th July, 2020, suggests a different way to understand the diverse ways in which humans and other sentient beings are natural expressions of a reflexive, self-observing universe and the many ways in which this universe might be conscious. The presentation then introduces different ways to explore the ground of being, and makes connections with Eastern as well as Western philosophy. Find the full presentation here.

Elisabet Sahtouris: Humanity Rising interview

Elisabet Sahtouris is an evolutionary biologist and Honorary Member of the SMN. In this video, part of the ongoing series of Humanity Rising events, she shares with host Jim Garrison 'her vision of how we can attain sustainable health and well-being within the larger living systems of Earth and the cosmos.'

Here is more from the introduction: 'The pandemic has originated out of nature. Humanity has been brought to a standstill by a microbe. The pandemic thus challenges us to understand afresh our relationship with the larger ecosystem, otherwise our civilization will founder and our species could become extinct.' Watch the full presentation here. And sign up for Humanity Rising here.

Suzanne Taylor: Kindness is Coming into Vogue

In this blog, Suzanne Taylor refers to an article published by the LA Times about the launching of the UCLA Bedari Kindness Institute, the first interdisciplinary research of its kind (no pun intended). Its ultimate goal is to spread kindness and promote a more humane world by developing techniques to help practice kindness through online programmes, lectures, media outreach and the free app called UCLA Mindful. ► THE BOOKCAST

Secular and Mystical Spirituality

This episode reviews two books on spirituality, the first, Secular Spirituality, by Harald Walach, and the second, Belonging to God, by Will Keepin. Both are important contributions to the field of science and spirituality with an emphasis on inner experience as a means of accessing other levels of reality, as one sees, for instance, in near-death experiences. Harald's book provides a lot of historical background, with some fascinating insights into Roger Bacon, while Will draws on 35 years of spiritual practice while also referring to classic mystical texts in a number of traditions. ► ARTICLES OF NOTE

Frank Furedi: A Disaster without Precedent

Prof Frank Furedi is a sociologist and social commentator who is Emeritus Professor of Sociology at the University of Kent, and is widely cited for his views on the difficulties of engaging with risk and uncertainty. Here he argues that Covid-19 is a disaster without precedent – not primarily in terms of the disease itself, but in terms of how we have responded to it.

'The impact of Covid-19 on people's lives and on economic, social and global relations, both now and in the future, is likely to be more far-reaching than any other previous public-health crisis. Not even during the First World War or the Second World War did governments feel the need to close schools. The application of emergency measures in response to Covid-19 is unparalleled in peacetime.' Full article here.

Deepak Chopra: Is Reincarnation Actually Real?

In this interesting article, Deepak Chopra quotes a recent poll where 33% of Americans report a belief in reincarnation. He points out that in modern secular society, the question of survival of bodily death has been channelled into belief vs science, a framework that he finds unhelpful as a 'false divide'. He points out that a great deal of credible research on the topic has been carried out at the University of Virginia (we have Jim Tucker giving a talk on this in the autumn), proposing that 'if everything is recycling under the influence of creativity, memory and imagination, it seems very likely that human consciousness participates in the same recycling' – an intriguing thought. ► FEATURED PODCAST

Mark Gober: Where is my Mind?

BY DAVID LORIMER

Where does your 'mind' come from? Easy answer: Your brain...right? Think again. Where Is My Mind? explores a revolutionary hypothesis: What if consciousness comes from outside the body? The show host is Mark Gober, a consciousness researcher and author of An End to Upside Down Thinking, who also happens to be a former Wall Street banker. And in addition to his free podcast, if you register on Mark's website (£25, paid once) you can see 50 more interviews - many with Galileo Commission advisers.
